OVERVIEW: FINANCIAL POLICIES

Standard Payment Policy

When a student is accepted for admission to Columbia College, the student accepts the standard payment policy of Columbia College. Students incur financial liability when they complete an official Columbia College registration form online.

Educational expenses may include tuition, textbooks, and miscellaneous fees related to the course(s). The personal payment portion of the student's educational expenses (educational expenses less financial aid or assistance award) is due in full at the time of registration. (See the Financial Aid and Scholarship section of the undergraduate catalog for detailed information).

If full payment is not possible, students are allowed to request a deferred payment plan. The arrangement requires payment of one half of the personal payment portion at the time of registration with the remaining portion due by the end of the session for which the student is registering. The student must have a zero balance when registering for a subsequent session even if the student is under a deferred payment plan from the previous session. The student commits to this when he or she signs the deferred payment plan agreement form.

Deferred payment plans are valid for only one session and must be requested for each individual session.
